

HII Family Health Center Celebrates Grand Opening

On Saturday, March 19, more than 300 Newport News Shipbuilding employees and family members attended the HII Family Health Center's grand opening event, which included self-guided tours of the facility, cooking demonstrations, music, games and prize giveaways.

Bill Bell, vice president of Human Resources and Administration, welcomed guests. "The health and well-being of employees and their families at Newport News Shipbuilding is and has been a priority," he said. "We continue to launch healthy campaigns like the NNS 5K, Take an Hour, Relay for Life teams, the American Heart Association's Heart Walk and others to promote healthy behaviors in the workforce. It makes sense then that the next step in our journey together in good health is to build and open a new HII Family Health Center."

Sue Buettner, president, QuadMed also provided remarks. "It is a great honor for QuadMed to be here. You are the greatest shipbuilders in the world and QuadMed is proud and honored to be selected to be able to take care of each one of you and build personal relationships with you, which is essential to great quality health care," she said.

NNS Sponsors 2016 FIRST Robotics Competition

Newport News Shipbuilding sponsored the 2016 FIRST (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology) Robotics Competition Stronghold at Churchland High School in Portsmouth March 19-20. The two-day event marked the organization's first annual competition, which is designed to simulate real-world engineering and design challenges, in Virginia's southeastern region.

"It's inspiring to see these high school students come together and build these robots and compete," said Jennifer Boykin, vice president of Engineering and Design, who served as competition's key note speaker.

Representative Gwen Graham Visits USG

On March 10, Rep. Gwen Graham, D-Fla., who represents Florida's second congressional district, visited Undersea Solutions Group for a tour of the facility.

Graham met with USG's engineers to learn about their current work with underwater vehicles, including Proteus, a dual-mode underwater vehicle designed to deliver large payloads at distances of hundreds of miles in either manned or unmanned modes. Proteus is currently completing a simulated 30-day mission in USG's outdoor test tank. Graham also received an update on USG's overhaul and modernization of an Egyptian Navy submersible.

"Undersea Solutions Group provides our military a vital service that will continue to grow as our Navy incorporates more manned and unmanned undersea vehicles in its missions," Graham said. "I'm proud to see these specialized, technologically advanced vehicles designed and built in north Florida. I appreciate the opportunity to tour USG's facilities and meet with its employees to learn more about undersea vehicles and their capabilities."

Ross Lindman, vice president of Operations, said, "It has been a privilege to host Representative Graham to show her the innovative work we are doing at USG."

CVN 79 Team Implements Component Insulation Process Improvement

The insulation team (X91) working on aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy (CVN 79) recently made process improvements to the component insulation process. Before the improvement, insulation would arrive to Newport News Shipbuilding in extremely large rolls that would have to be transported by forklifts, cut into smaller pieces and bagged before delivery to the job site.

"The process was very labor-intensive and material would need to be moved several times before being installed," said Foreman Kenny McBurney. "The team came up with a new process that would permit the vendor to deliver the material in smaller sizes so that the material could be sent directly to the jobsite from the warehouse."

In addition to reducing the size of the material, Insulator Brian Hoffstatter (X33) submitted an Opportunity for Improvement (OFI) to improve the process of mixing the cement that secures the insulation to the components. "The original mixing process was done by hand using a mud pan and a mortar-hoe," said Hoffstatter. "My idea was to incorporate an automatic cement mixer into our process."

Hoffstatter's OFI was approved. "Now we can mix two bags of cement in less time than it took to mix one by hand," he said. "In addition to speeding up the process, it is also more ergonomically-friendly on our body. You're never going to take out the physical part of our job, but you can make it easier."

McBurney said he is extremely proud of the team. "They put their minds together to make the process easier and more efficient for everyone involved," he said. "In addition to saving us a lot of time, these changes will also reduce the possibility of injuries."

Following remarks, guests were able to tour the facility. As they visited each area of the health center, they received stamps inside of a passport. After visiting each area, they were entered into a drawing for a chance to win gift cards, FitBits or an Apple Watch.

Gerard Ragland, X87 production planner, attended the event. "It was very informative, very nice," he said. "I am definitely going to take advantage of it for me and my family. I like the $15 fee and having it right across the street. It is very affordable and will save me time. I can come right over after work and pick up a prescription. The company has been focused on safety first and this is another way to promote that."

NNS Welder Recognized by Bush's Commanding Officer

On Feb. 12, Welding Technician Joe Strickland (O37) received the Avenger Award from the commanding officer of USS George H.W. Bush (CVN 77). The award was presented to Strickland in appreciation for his outstanding efforts on the CVN 77 Aircraft Elevator Hitch Girder Project.

In January, Strickland performed work on the aircraft carrier while it was docked at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. During the project, he was asked to provide insight into resolving the aluminum welding challenges on Bush's aircraft elevator hitch girders. Strickland reviewed Ultrasonic Testing (UT) inspection reports, analyzed weld defects, observed welding work and provided improvement suggestions to NNS welders. The project was completed successfully on Jan. 29.

"Joe's level of dedication to both Welding Engineering and NNS is visible every day regardless of what he is working on," said Jackie Philips, Welding Engineering manager. "He takes pride in his work and holds himself accountable for results. Joe is always thinking about and acting on ways to be more efficient and improve processes for production."

Welding Technician Joe Strickland is awarded the Avenger Award from Capt. Will Pennington, USS George H.W. Bush (CVN 77) commanding officer.

MDC Holds Leadership Training at Savannah River Site

Newport News Shipbuilding's Management Development Center (MDC) employees, Darlene Chisholm, manager of Organizational Development, and John Shifflett, director of Leadership and Organization Development, conducted leadership training sessions at the Savannah River Site throughout the week of March 7.

Sessions were focused on "Re-Thinking Accountability" and "Creating a Performance Culture" around the concept of operations principles which guide work at the site. The sessions used examples from the film "Apollo 13" and a case study of the Columbia space shuttle disaster to illustrate how workplace leaders can help create a more engaging and productive work environment. Class participants included leaders from the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board, the Department of Energy, Savannah River Nuclear Laboratory, and Savannah River Nuclear Solutions.

Shifflett said, "Participants were very enthusiastic about the sessions and commented that they are on target for their operations."

NNS Sponsors 2016 FIRST Robotics Competition

... "This competition helps spark a passion for STEM and offers students invaluable experience working together on hard problems as a team."

This year's theme was a castle tower defense game, where teams of three competed with robots to cross defenses and shoot boulders through goals in the opposing tower to earn points.

Of the 34 robotics teams involved, 14 local high school teams from throughout southeastern Virginia participated. More than 20 NNS employees participated as volunteers. Sixteen served as team mentors and two served as judges for the competition.

NNS Employees Rick Burgos (O22) and Frank DeBrouse (X57) mentored a team from Heritage High School. "The whole experience was a roller coaster of emotions for us," said Burgos. "From successfully competing in our first competition to watching our robot sit motionless at one point. In the end, we were very excited about our performance and we ultimately received the Rookie Inspiration Award for perseverance. The work of the past three months paid off as the team came together when it mattered most."

Leah Colvin (E04), engineering manager of Modeling and Simulation, participated in the event as a volunteer. "I enjoyed sharing with the students how we're applying technologies like virtual reality and augmented reality in the shipbuilding industry. It was impressive that so many of them already have experience with engineering and software programming, and many students were already interested in pursuing engineering-related degrees and maybe one day pursuing a career at Newport News Shipbuilding," she said.

Visit the FIRST Robotics website on Yardnet or contact Chris Brown (O35) at 688-7897 to see how you can get involved or for additional information.
