Enterprise (CVN 65) Inactivation Complete

Newport News Shipbuilding has completed the inactivation of Enterprise (CVN 65).

As part of the complex process that began in 2013, more than 1,000 shipbuilders defueled the ship's eight nuclear reactors, inactivated its propulsion systems and prepared its hull for final tow. NNS completed the inactivation base work in December 2017, and the government contracting office review and certification of the paperwork has just been completed. Enterprise will remain at the shipyard to complete post-inactivation work to prepare the ship for storage in the Hampton Roads area until a disposal plan is determined by the U.S. Navy.

"This is a bittersweet moment for us," said Chris Miner, vice president of In-Service Aircraft Carrier Programs. "Enterprise has meant so much to Newport News Shipbuilding and the men and women who helped cement her place in history. With all of the lessons we learned from inactivating the first nuclear-powered aircraft carrier in our company's 130-year history, we look forward to bringing that knowledge to the inactivation of the Nimitz class..."

IT Announces Changes Regarding PCs and Approval Processes

The approval process for laptops, smartphones and tablets just got a little easier.

Shipbuilders looking to order these IT devices no longer need to seek vice presidents' signatures as part of the approval process. Final approval will be made by the shipbuilders' supervisors.

"Authority is being given to the company leaders who should be making these everyday decisions—direct supervisors," said Bharat Amin, vice president and chief information officer. "More and more, these technologies are becoming standard tools to get our jobs done more efficiently. The process to get them should be as efficient as the tools themselves."

Amin said NNS is moving from desktop to laptop computers as its business standard, or default, beginning April 23. Desktop computers will be replaced with laptops when they are scheduled for refresh, and shipbuilders who need desktop computers will now have to specifically request them.

Kennedy (CVN 79) Pipefitters Gain Efficiency With New Tool

In an effort to identify opportunities to work more efficiently, a diverse team of shipbuilders found a better process for pipefitters to use when banding pipes on aircraft carriers like John F. Kennedy (CVN 79).

In the past, pipefitters relied on a manual pipe banding system that left sharp edges on the banding material and required strenuous movements to properly secure the piping, including repetitive ratcheting, firm grasping to cut the material and hammering with side-cutting pliers to secure the material.

The team researched and tested a new innovative banding system. The new system was in pipefitters' hands within months of obtaining NAVSEA approval and features factory-ground edges that reduce the potential for injury. The new banding material is installed with a cordless tool that has significant ergonomic improvements and makes the installation much faster than the manual banding process.

“When I first introduced the tool, my crew was skeptical, as many people are with new ideas. But, very quickly they realized how much easier it makes their job and now they prefer to use it all the time,” said X42 Foreman Chelsie Baker.

CVN 79 Pipe Lead General Foreman Ken Keeter said, “This collaborative effort harnessed the talents and opinions of the entire value stream and exemplifies the NNSFORWARD Strategy.”

...of aircraft carriers, beginning with CVN 68 in 2025.”

Built by Newport News shipbuilders and christened in September 1960, Enterprise provided a record 51 consecutive years of service to the Navy. The only one of its class, the aircraft carrier aided in the Cuban Missile Crisis and operations Enduring Freedom and New Dawn, as well as naval maritime security operations.

The ship was decommissioned on Feb. 3, 2017.

NNS currently is performing advance construction on Enterprise (CVN 80), the ninth U.S. Navy ship to bear the legendary name. Award of the CVN 80 detail design and construction contract is anticipated this year.

Shipbuilders Evaluate Digital Devices

About 200 shipbuilders representing 36 departments had the opportunity to weigh in on the discussion about Newport News Shipbuilding's digital transformation during a Client Device Summit last month.

The summit, held in NNS' mobile experience (MX) trailer, included supplier representatives from three companies – HP, Panasonic and Getac. Fourteen rugged and semi-rugged devices like laptops and tablets were available to be evaluated by shipbuilders.

“The goal was for people who are using mobile devices on the deckplate to get a sense of what these suppliers have to offer and the potential for getting some of their devices into our fleet,” said Rachel Gilpin (T56), who represents IT in the Integrated Digital Shipbuilding (iDS) Program Office.

It was important to hear from the people who will use the devices, said Systems Architect Bruce Stein (T54). “There was great participation, especially from the trades in the iDS program. They were very engaged, walked up to tables, saw what they were looking for and started asking the suppliers questions,” he said. Among the primary concerns for devices intended for deckplate environments are wireless connectivity, ruggedness and battery life. Shipbuilders filled out surveys following the summit.

“We got a lot out of this, but it’s the beginning of a long process,” Stein said. “It was very well received by those who attended, and I think we’ll likely see adoption of some of these devices because participants were involved in the conversation directly with the suppliers.”

Marissa Webb (X51) attended the summit. “It’s nice that there are so many options out there, and it looks like the technology is coming a long way,” she said.

Industrial Engineering Mobility and Connectivity Lead Donna A. Graves (X51) said she knew the event would be a success. “I’m excited that our time and effort paid off,” she said. “The team did a great job, and I’m looking forward to the next one.”

As the city provides further updates, Newport News Shipbuilding will communicate with employees. For more information about the project, watch a video report on MyNNS.

Retired NNS President Honored

Matt Mulherin, former president of Newport News Shipbuilding, was recognized by the United States Navy League April 9 as a 2018 recipient of its annual Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz Award.

This award honors an industry leader who has demonstrated the leadership, statesmanship and dedication to the nation that were exhibited by the award's namesake.

Mulherin, who retired from the company in July 2017 after a distinguished 36-year career, was honored at the Navy League's annual Sea-Air-Space banquet, held on Monday at the Gaylord National Resort and Convention Center in National Harbor, Maryland.

"Although this award has my name on it, the reality is that it's a tribute to all of the wonderful people who have supported my shipbuilding journey," Mulherin said. "Shipbuilding is a team sport, and this award
